claimed the life of one of Calumet's sons. It was in the course of that action that a grieving Calumet, bitter at the militia's failure to keep her family secure, threw her lot in with the Swordsworn and accepted an offer to join the Prince's Men.

Margot Calumet was a reservist for the militia on Achernar when darkness descended across The Republic. Calumet led an ordinary life as a married mother of three children, employed by day as an air traffic controller for the local heliport, but when the HPG grid fell silent and paranoia took hold across The Republic, life quickly turned ugly at home. Achernar became a battleground between the Swordsworn and the Steel Wolves factions, and Calumet's neighborhood was caught in the crossfire. Swordsworn troops eventually ejected the Wolves, but only after heavy collateral damage

Contrary to its antimilitary critics, Bulldog Enterprises of Proserpina did not develop the Garrot Superheavy Transport as a military complement to the venerable Planetlifter air transport. In fact, the lightly armed and armored Garrot is simply a military cargo conversion of the company's SkyStar freighter, an economical VTOL cargo carrier/freighter used on dozens of worlds throughout The Republic. Lighter than the Planetlifter, with over half its mass given over to cargo, the Garrot exchanges payload for protection, and is often fielded far away from any battle lines.

RS101-2029A ("Winged Chariot" to its current crew commander, Margot Calumet) is one of several hundred Garrots commissioned by The Republic of the Sphere to serve as the backbone of the aerial logistics chain of The Republic military. Despite its intended role, the craft has flown dozens of sorties as an infantry transport, ferrying infantry fighting vehicles (and their troops) to and from a battlefield, occasionally under fire.
