woman who our agents believe has ties to either the Maskirovka or local Triads, some form of political seduction is suspected. However, Glasper's lack of status in House Davion's political, social, and military infrastructure would make him less than useful to any obvious Confederation goals. Meanwhile, his loyalty to House Liao appears to be beyond reproach, indicative of a genuine transfer of loyalties.

Although many in House Liao's veteran McCarron's Armored Cavalry regiment can claim a heritage dating back to their mercenary days, the same cannot be said of Anderson Glasper. In fact, this man could not even claim Capellan citizenship until just four years ago. The cause of Glasper's defection from the Federated Suns is not immediately clear, but soon after arriving in the Confederation he married Yulia Hwang, a Capellan citizen of some social standing, and formally joined the CCAF. Between his youth and his marriage to a

The Glory fire-support tank rolled off assembly lines for the first time in 3067, after a three-year delay caused by the very civil war it was initially meant to take part in. Sporting a rotary autocannon system, matched by twin long-range missile racks, this tank made up for its slow ground speed with sheer firepower and durability. During the Jihad, hundreds of Glorys were produced, seeing action throughout the Davion realm and with Devlin Stone's coalition, where they more than adequately proved their worth.

FS0678-20A has been nicknamed "Wayward Suns" by Anderson Glasper, its current commander, in what he swears is a tongue-in-cheek reference to both his origins and the vehicle's. This particular tank, however, did not defect like its commander, but was captured by Capellan troops during a border skirmish with House Davion forces on Spica. Glasper prefers using his Glory's indirect weapons to charging directly into battle.
